To whom it may concern,

CxC is an undergraduate program at LSU that focuses on enhancing the learning experiences of LSU students while actively working to help improve their writing, speaking, visual, and technological communication skills. The department operates four Studios on LSU's campus where students can get assistance with communication-based assignments in a variety of mediums. Dylan has worked as a peer mentor in our CxC Communication Studio 151 since September 2010. Since the first day that he started on the job, we have been immensely impressed with the attention to detail, organization skills, and overall technical expertise that he brings to his position. Dylan is one of 12 undergraduate mentors in Studio 151 and he quickly assumed a leadership role among his peers.

He has risen to the challenge of every duty that we have put him in charge of, and as such, he currently serves as the assistant Studio coordinator, responsible for coordinating the day-to-day operations of the space. In that position, he oversees the other mentors, their daily task lists, and is also responsible for training and other customer service focused duties. Dylan is capable in so many additional areas of expertise, he is often our go-to person when we are planning or thinking through how to implement a project we are working on in the Studio. To that end, he also serves as both the technology coordinator for all IT assets in the Studio, as well as a Wikipedia Campus Ambassador with the Wikipedia Education Project that CxC participates in.

In his primary role as a Studio peer mentor, Dylan provides assistance and feedback to LSU undergraduate students working on communication-related projects such as oral and visual presentations, video productions, podcasts, websites, and more. He has also developed educational sessions on effective visual communication, which he has delivered via workshops to LSU students and faculty.

I am certain that Dylan will make a meaningful impact in any position that you use his skills for. He is an invaluable asset to any organization. Though I would certainly miss his expertise within my organization, I have no issues recommending him to work in yours. Please contact me if you have any additional questions about his qualifications.

Sincerely,

Kevin DiBenedetto
